Let us not begin at the beginning, nor even at the archive.

But rather at the word "archive"—and with the archive of so familiar a word. Arkhē, we recall, names at once the commencement and the commandment. This name apparently coordinates two principles in one: the principle according to nature or history, there where things commence—physical, historical, or ontological principle—but also the principle according to the law, there where men and gods command, there where authority, social order are exercised, in this place from which order is given—nomological principle.

There, we said, and in this place. How are we to think of there? And this taking place or this having a place of the arkhē?

Modernism seems to have ground to a halt – in the novel at least. Are people getting their experimental kicks from other sources, such as the Net? Maybe if Joyce had been able to surf the Web he would have written Gone with the Wind rather than Finnegans Wake?
No – I see it the other way round. If Margaret Mitchell had been able to surf the Web she would probably have written Finnegans Wake. And in any case, Joyce was always online. He never came off.

It is ceasing to be a matter of how we think about technics, if only because technics is increasingly thinking about itself. It might still be a few decades before artificial intelligences surpass the horizon of biological ones, but it is utterly superstitious to imagine that the human dominion of terrestrial culture is still marked out in centuries, let alone in some metaphysical perpetuity. The high road to thinking no longer passes through a deepening of human cognition, but rather through a becoming inhuman of cognition, a migration of cognition out into the emerging planetary technosentience reservoir, into "dehumanized landscapes ... emptied spaces"[1] where human culture will be dissolved. Just as the capitalist urbanization of labour abstracted it in a parallel escalation with technical machines, so will intelligence be transplanted into the purring data zones of new software worlds in order to be abstracted from an increasingly obsolescent anthropoid particularity, and thus to venture beyond modernity. Human brains are to thinking what mediaeval villages were to engineering; antechambers to experimentation, cramped and parochial places to be.
THERE WAS AMOVIE CAMERA HIDDEN IN THE BOWER OF SIMPLICITY I WAS SPEAKING FROM. THERE WAS ALWAYS SO MANY THINGS I NEEDED TO SAY the fetish is no longer strictly a material object that refers to something immaterial: it is a vector of signs values, or references that are properly immaterial, initating a new theatre of operations in which fetishism intervenes: a space that is neither simply speculative nor simply libidinal, but is precisely the space of the sensible.

Moore disappeared from her house on January 14, 1979. Her husband spent a year searching for her, including journeys to Hong Kong and Thailand, places to which she had traveled in the past. Her skeleton was found in early spring, 1981, in the place where she had frozen to death. She had made a journey at night into the dark world of the forest, a potent Jungian symbol, curled up in a tree, and then injected herself repeatedly with all of the ketamine she had been able to find. That night the pond froze over, the moon rose, and the Fire Lady was killed by the ice.

because nothing should be sure here, for essential reasons), the question of the archive is not, we repeat, a question of the past. It is not the question of a concept dealing with the past that might already be at our disposal or not at our disposal, an archivable concept of the archive. It is a question of the future, the question of the future itself, the question of a response, of a promise and of a responsibility for tomorrow. The archive: if we want to know what that will have meant, we will only know in times to come. Perhaps. Not tomorrow but in times to come, later on or perhaps never. A spectral messianicity is at work in the concept of the archive and ties it, like religion, like history, like science itself, to a very singular experience of the promise. And we are never far from Freud in saying this. Messianicity does not mean messianism. Having ex-

the archiviolithic drive is never present in person, neither in itself nor in its effects. It leaves no monument, it bequeaths no document of its own. As inheritance, it leaves only its erotic simulacrum, its pseudonym in painting, its sexual idols, its masks of seduction: lovely impressions. These impressions are perhaps the very origin of what is so obscurely called the beauty of the beautiful. As memories of death.

In the drafts of this project that have come down to us, we discover, above all, a concern with organizing a ceremony of reading analogous to a secularized mass – a ceremony whose Bible would be a Book made of mobile pages, without the name of an author, and whose officiant is presented as an 'operator' joining two by two the loose-leaf pages according to a complex combinatorial that, so it seems, was intended to discover a multitude of meanings that would vary with the connections.

dissemination to be a celestial symbol of Chance. To cut out, with the gaze, a constellation from this senseless splendor, is to carry out an act wholly analogous to the poetic act according to Mallarmé. For this poet seeks to make scintillate words forged and disseminated by the chance of language, through the usage of a disconcerting syntax in which each vocable seems isolated by a 'lacuna' from all the others, as if decontextualized: which allows it to shine with a light one has never before perceived in it.[23] The constellation of the Septentrion is thus the perfect symbol of the Beautiful, detached in all its resplendence on the ground of eternal Chance. It is also the reminder that the absence of God, his proven Nothingness, is the condition of the Beautiful, just as Night and the annihilation of solar light is the condition of stellar splendor – which is, from now on, our compass.[24]

Baldwin: When I say poet, it's an arbitrary word. It's a word I use because I don't like the word artist. Nina Simone is a poet. Max Roach is a poet. There is a whole list of people. I'm not talking about literature at all. I'm talking about the recreation of experience, you know, the way that it comes back. Billie Holiday was a poet. She gave you back your experience. She refined it, and you recognized it for the first time because she was in and out of it and she made it possible for you to bear it. And if you could bear it, then you could begin to change it. That's what a poet does. I'm not talking about books. I'm talking about a certain kind of passion, a certain kind of energy which people produce and they secrete. In certain people like Billie Holiday, Nina Simone, and Max Roach because they need it, and these people give it back to you and they get you from one place to another.

moment of the Septuor. The o is 'surrounded' by the 7; at once admitted and controlled. The void between two rhymes, that annihilation of the written by the blank, is similarly held in the margins – tamed like an animal that, however dangerous, is alone capable of bringing us to our destination safely. Nothingness is not rejected from poetic writing, nor does it become dominant to the point of destroying the possibility of that writing: It is 'inserted' into the verse, making a couplet of it, so as to prohibit the immediate self-identity, the unity closed back upon itself, of the unique verse. Unlike antique verse, which is separated according to the regime of the One, modern verse, because it is rhymed, is split within itself, creating a cavity between whose walls is engendered a system of reciprocal echoes. The cyclical Number is also a cyclopean angels and the Holy Spirit. We just saw that Evagrius thinks that human beings are capable of moving up the chain of being when they take on the tasks and responsibilities of the angels. This moving up on the chain of being, for Evagrius, implies that human beings can exchange their human bodies for angelic bodies and become equal to the angels in an ontological sense. Earlier in this paper, we saw that angels can perform many of the same functions as the Holy Spirit. Can the angels, who take on some of the responsibilities given to the Holy Spirit, also move up the chain of being and become equal to God in an ontological sense? Francois Refoulé and Francis Kline have both suggested that Evagrius's Christology, following Origen, allows for the possibility that human and angelic intellects eventually become equal to Christ.[43] Can a similar argument be made regarding the angels and the Holy Spirit?

individual archives differently. All that Freud says is that we are receptive to an analogy between the two types of transgenerational memory or archive (the memory of an ancestral experience or the so-called biologically acquired character) and that "we cannot imagine [vorstellen] one without the other" [SE 23:100]. Without the irrepressible, that is to say, only suppressible and repressible, force and authority of this transgenerational memory, the problems of which we speak would be dissolved and resolved in advance. There would no longer be any essential history of culture, there would no longer be any question of memory and of archive, of

This mastered assumption of the void in Number thus gestures toward the final Constellation and the type of splendor it displays: There is no stellar beauty without night being assumed (no constellation without the end of day) but mastered within certain limits (the black night, the 'hubristic' night, is to be avoided). The condition of the new poetry is thus identified as that of the absence of the old divine transcendence, but this absence lived no longer in the mode of an infinite mourning, but in the mode of a fecund, creative nothingness. We seem to have reached a dead end: Either hesitation is real – felt by an existing individual and not a fictional character, in which case it cannot be eternal – or hesitation is fictive, an object of literature, and can indeed arrive at the perenniality of an ideal sense, but in doing so must part ways with reality.

feed. But, according to the poet, it is precisely representation that art must break with if it would claim to go beyond Christianity. To want to be Greek is an impossible desire: not because the Greeks are a lost origin, a perfect unity of art, science and politics impossible to rediscover; but, on the contrary, because we moderns know that they are not our real origin. Our true lost origin, that which we must bring to life again, albeit in a new form, is not Greek Antiquity, but the Latin Middle Ages – the 'incubatory' Middle Ages that the poet does not hesitate to call our 'Mother'.[5]

My life is similar to a movie

simply "you will miss me but that's good"
when the tears of a whole generation are assembled they will only fill a coffee cup just because they evaporate doesn't mean life has heat
"this various dream of living"
I am alive with you
full of anxious pleasures and pleasurable anxiety hardness and softness
listening while you talk and talking while you read
I read what you read
you do not read what I read
which is right, I am the one with the curiosity you read for some mysterious reason I read simply because I am a writer the sun doesn't necessarily set, sometimes it just disappears
when you're not here someone walks in
and says "hey,
there's no dancer in that bed"
O the Polish summers! those drafts!
those black and white teeth!
you never come when you say you'll come but on the other hand you do come

For the web3-curious: it's a conspiracy-space. It is all about power. It is the most cerebral and exciting chess game of our lives.

underground. I could write it
all down
I could write it all
over that
internal experience
like that. "Yooo I hope
when I die
I hope that
it's forever."
Chance itself.
The Coup de dés as christic crystallization of Chance.
As Christal of Nothingness.
As that which makes no longer being, but the perhaps,
the first task – the task to come – of thinkers and poets.
